

Seeking Interested Consumer for Research Project!

Do you have an understanding of female reproductive cancer knowledge and would be interested in contributing to the development of a research project in this area?

The School of Population Health at The University of Western Australia is developing a project which focuses on early life and lifestyle impacts on the risk of developing endometrial cancer in adult women. This project involves a combination of questionnaire/survey and WA Department of Health Cancer Registry data. They are looking for a consumer to provide a consumer perspective on various aspect of the project such as result interpretation and information dissemination at the end of the project.
